Material Recycling Facilities (MRFs) are increasingly important in providing quality materials to industry and reducing the need for virgin feedstock. Although MRF capacity in the UK is expanding, it is unevenly distributed and investment in further capacity will be needed as demand increases.

MRFs have a key role to play in the creation of high quality/high value recyclate streams that can be used as feedstock materials by a range of industries, however should the feedstock be separated at source or co-mingled?

Envirolink Northwest is holding this event to debate this question between key players in the industry, so that delegates can get a better understanding of the requirements for material recycling. Delegates also have the opportunity to experience a working state of the art MRF in operation.

Who should attend?

Collection companies

Local authorities

Local businesses

End users of MRF material.
